English Household Economy.

The Englishman's Domestic Magazine has just introduced into its columns a department called "The Exchange," whereby its subscribers may advertise such of their superfluous articles as they may wish to exchange for somebody else's superfluous. The London fashion newspaper, called The Queen, has long possessed such a feature, and, as we believe, no American newspaper has adopted the idea, our readers will probably be entertained by a few examples of how it is done. In a recent number of The Queen we find advertised in "The Exchange" department, among numerous other things, the following:—

"I have a lovely Cephaline, in Shetland wool; also pretty mourning-cap, in same wool. Want offers, of wood for fretwork and carving, illuminated monograms, foreign stamps, etc.—Tertia."

"I have two gilt chignon bands, quite new, cost 12s. 6d. each, ornamented with handsome sprays and pendants at the side. I wish to exchange them for a jet necklet, bracelet, and brooch; or an open to good offers.—Falcon."

"I have a small oval ring, which I should be glad to exchange for a ring that could be worn in mourning (the latter not to be jet), or for one of the new-fashioned round tear-tablets.—Lily."

"I am wanting a pair of turquoise ear-rings, and will give in exchange a pair of pearl ones and a gift band for chignon.—Minor Canon's Sister."

"I have a very handsome pair of malachite ear-rings, solid balls. I wish gold sleeve-links in exchange.—Spider."

"I want a set of coral bracelet—a small round coral set in gold. Many things to offer in exchange.—Pera Gones."

"I have a pair of gold earrings: Don't be cross," represented by a bee on a cross, with "Don't be blue-enamel letters. Also a pair of coral shoes as earrings. Wanted, a thick, plain ring, with stones. Offers this week unsatisfactory.—Address 'C. G. B.' care of Mr. Albers, Stationer, Ealing."

"But the advertisements do not all refer to worn-out ornaments, some offering books, some music, and some even pet birds and other animals. One offers 'Indian preserves, curiously, mangoes, citron,' for a 'lady's silk umbrella.' Another would like to get rid of a 'raised crocheted antimacassar,' and would take a 'double-scent bottle' in exchange, but is open, however, to other offers. Another has 'two and a quarter yards of embroidery, three and a half inches wide, and wants four ounces of Shetland wool.' Another is eager for a sealskin jacket, and will surrender a gold bracelet for it. And so on. We are cited enough to show the notable economy of English household, and to prove that Yankees have a lesson or two to learn in rendering useless things valuable.—Appleton's Journal."
